We have been in the navy prisons on brend-and-water diet, and have agreed that we would rather be there 100 days than in this place one day, with bread and sausage to eat. The vermin are simply unbearable and the quicker they get us back to prison the better we'll like it. Special Officers Viehle and McCormack of the Elchth Instrict arrested Hayden and Riesemy. Hayden was rooming at No. 1416 North Jefferson avenue and Riesemy at No. 150 Park avenue. They escaped from a navy prison ship at Hampton Roads several months ago. They will be taken back to-day.

Mr. Hunting believed none of these things. He admitted that the electric transay was a serious competitor and probably 20,000 horses had been displaced in Great Britain by electricity and that more were sure to follow. Automobiles had also displaced a few animals, but in many cases the owners had returned to horses.

Then he made a statement at which many of his conferees could not forego smiling in a sickly manner. The first six months' work by an automobile, when everything was new and taut in the way of machinery, had decelved people into believing it was their permanent condition, but owners however, would have a rude awakening and be glad to resume horse haulage. In fact, he knew many who had done so aiready.

But against such a statement as this is the fact that builders of all kinds of automobiles, whether carriages, vans or wagons, never were so busy as now.

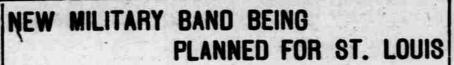

Of tradesmen's cars there are now over 2,500 in London, and these may be said to be increasing daily. There are now nearly 2,00 omnibuses in streets, while in the West End, the private automobile is more in evidence than the borse carriage.
